DEATHS

MR. W. H. LUCADO

Mr. William Henry (Bill) Lucado, 89, died last Thursday night at Halifax Community Hospital, after a month's illness.

He was the son of the late Elisha and Catherine Conner Lucado. His wife was the late Beulah Hamilton Lucado.

He is survived by a son, J. H. Lucado, of Appomattox, and two daughters, Mrs. E. W. Hamlett, of Halifax, and Mrs. H. H. Houston, of Lynchburg. Also by four brothers, R. H. Lucado, Littleton Lucado and Edward Lucado, of Appomattox, and Ira Lucado, of Lynchburg; two sisters, Mrs. Florence Bingham and Mrs. Della Dose, both of Appomattox; six grandchildren and seven great grandchildren.

Funeral services were held at 11 A. M. Saturday from the Robinson Funeral home, Appomattox.

Services were conducted by the Rev. Richard A. Bergdoll. Miss Peggy Godsey played selections of organ music. Interment was in the family cemetery, this county. Active pallbearers were: R. B. Boney, David Robertson, Charles Moses Sr., Walker Garrett, Duval Conner and Jacob Lewis.

GARDEN SUGGESTIONS

The garden suggestions for January by L. C. Beamer, V. P. I. Garden Specialist, should be of help to you in 1958.

Will The Vegetable Garden Pay? The garden should pay a good dividend and should supply fresh, high quality, valuable food for the family throughout the year.

January is the time to plan the garden and begin preparing the land.

Location and Size of Garden: The home garden should be located as close to the kitchen door as possible. The size of the garden depends upon the needs of the family and the land available. A well-kept small garden is much better than one too large which has been poorly cared for during the growing season. Locating the garden close to the home will save time and you will often produce more vegetables of a higher quality because you will take better care of it.

A good rule to follow is to plant half an acre garden for a family of 5. You should be able to produce enough to provide the family with ample fresh vegetables plus enough for canning, freezing, and storing for the winter months.

Garden Clean Up. January is the month when all weeds and grasses should be removed from the garden or plowed under. If the old vegetables such as kale, collards etc., are diseased, remove them before plowing. Cleaning and plowing or spading the garden early is a must with the successful home gardener.

How To Get Industry

By Chris H. Whiteman

(Director of Industrial Development, Virginia State Chamber of Commerce, Richmond, Virginia).

Editor's Note: This is the first of a series on INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT by Mr. Whiteman, a recognized authority in this field. In the first installment, Mr. Whiteman discusses what the community can do to attract new industry; the second deals with what industry seeks in a community and how expansion is planned; in the final installment, the operation of an agency engaged in industrial development (The State Chamber) is discussed.

Richmond, Va.- Industrial development, which has become known as a magic potion that can do wondrous things for a community, just does not "happen."

Plant location has become an exacting science based on sound engineering principles. Often millions of dollars are at stake in buildings and equipment.

Management must and does give very careful consideration to all needs of the projected plant before any attempt actualy is made to find a site, including problems of financing which must be discussed and solved. Often all this must be kept confidential.

Hence, an innocent envelope which arrives addressed to the Industrial Development Department of the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce — or to your local chamber, for that matter — could turn a three-cent investment into a three-million dollar contribution to Virginia's economy.

The Industrial Development Division of the Virginia State Chamber has detailed information with respect to all towns, cities and counties in the Commonwealth, as well as general information pertaining to utilities, fuels, water resources, labor availability, wage rates, transportation facilities, and a wealth of data which might be required for a prospective new plant or plant relocation within the Commonwealth.

In addition, the Virginia Chamber maintains a close liaison with State of Virginia agencies, with utility companies, with transportation agencies, with local chambers of commerce, and with many others interested in the development of Virginia.

Further, the Virginia Chamber maintains its own research department, with George Jennings as staff director, which cooperates in special studies which may be necessary on tax matters, education and governmental matters.

The Virginia Chamber, then, is the "middle man," the "tailor" to help find where the cloth (plant location) can best be cut to fit the pattern (the required essential factors).

The two words "industrial development" have come to displace "presto chango!" as being representative of magical portent.

Speaking them, and having them come of fruition, may well bring great and wonderful changes to any community — increased employment and payrolls — which directly affect the welfare and well-being of every citizen and business and profession; which, in turn, provide additional taxes to improve and expand direct municipal services such as schools, water supply and sewage disposal, streets, fire and police protection, recreational facilities and many others.

So well in this industrial development chain reaction recognized that practically every town and city and county of every state wants to participate in and enjoy the benefits.

Most want to do and are doing something about it. Sadly enough there's just not enough to go around and what industrial development may come can not be parceled around, as some folks believe, as some essentials for industrial growth are not contained within all areas.

Much is being done on a local basis by many communities throughout Virginia to ready themselves to enter the competition for industry. This may include such window dressing as beautification of business and residential areas, improvement of streets, new or improved municipal water and sewage systems and recreational facilities, which often must exist and be accomplished before the industrial development.

It's one of those unanswerable riddles of which must come first—the industrial "chicken" or the community services provided by the tax "egg." In most instances, the industry must have the community services before locating its plant; similarly, many of our communities seeking industrial expansion would be hard put to provide some of these services without industrial wage payrolls and taxes.

Communities interested in acquiring their first or expanded industrial plants and payrolls generally inquire into (1) What can we do to enhance our competitive position to "land" an industry; (2) How does an industrial "prospect" go about seeking a location for his new or subsidiary operation? and (3) How does the State Chamber process its industrial queries?

The answer to Point 1 would be that the town or city be made as attractive as possible and that continuing efforts be made to improve municipal services and facilities. Each of us looks upon our respective home community with pardonable pride as the "finest and best." Sometimes we are inclined to view it with rose-colored glasses, failing to see some features not so attractive to the industrial locator making a point-by-point comparison of our assets and liabilities.

Perhaps a soul-searching analysis would be in order. This is a relatively simple project and could be undertaken through the use of a splendid publication of the Public Utilities Association of Virginia entitled "How's Business in Our Town?" It suggest that communities should first organize, then survey, analyze and then go into action.

RE-EVALUATE CHEST X-RAYS IN VIRGINIA PROGRAMS

In view of the recent information on radiation exposure from x-rays, interested State groups meeting to re-evaluate community 70 mm x-ray surveys decided that in such surveys emphasis should be placed on selective groups rather than on a community-wide basis, reports Dr. Jack L. Chanbliss, State Health Commissioner.

Groups represented at the meeting last week were the Virginia Medical Society, the Virginia State Department of Health, the Virginia Tuberculosis Association, and the Virginia Trudeau Society.

Speaking for the representatives attending the meeting, Dr. Chanbliss said that they recommended the use of chest x-rays to find cases of tuberculosis among groups with the greatest risk of contracting the disease. This includes persons confined to hospitals, mental, penal, and other institutions, low income groups, migrant workers, and people known to be exposed to tuberculosis.

It was generally agreed, he said, that mass chest x-ray programs, when operated under competent auspices and with the approval of State and local health departments and medical societies, are still fundamental in the detection of tuberculosis. It was concluded that the risks from exposure are relatively small compared with the benefits that can be expected.

During the meeting the representatives of the various groups stressed that it is highly important that anyone 18 years or over who has never had a chest x-ray make a definite effort to have an x-ray taken. They suggested a tuberculin test for those persons under 18, followed by an x-ray when necessary. Routine chest x-rays for all hospital and clinic admissions were also recommended.

Statistic brought out in the meeting showed that in Virginia an estimated 5,000 to 10,000 undiagnosed cases of active tuberculosis in need of treatment are awaiting detection.

TAKE STAND ON AUTO INSURANCE

A new answer to the problems created by financially irresponsible motorists was presented to the Virginia Advisory Legislative Council this week.

In a meeting before the VALC John J. Wicker, Jr., of Richmond, offered a proposal, on behalf of the American Mutual Insurance Alliance, for a Required Responsibility Law.

The plan, which is receiving wide backing among members of the insurance industry, the press, Virginia state officials, and the public, would require every driver, as a condition of registering his car and buying his license plates, to show either:

1. That he carries liability insurance to cover any damage he might do to others.

2. That he has posted a bond or deposit, or a certificate of self-insurance to meet the requirements under Virginia's present Motor Vehicle Safety Responsibility Act.

This proposal could be enacted into law merely by amending Virginia's present law which at the present time does not require proof of financial responsibility until after a driver has had one accident.

Wicker pointed out that uninsured motorists do at least $17 million in damages in Virginia each year.

"The time to make sure a person is financially able to pay for any damage he may do," said Wicker, "is before he has any accidents, not after he has had one and cannot pay for the damage he caused."

Wicker saidt hat Required Responsibility would differ from compulsory insurance in several respects. The biggest difference, he said, is that under compulsory insurance, every driver is required to buy insurance and insurance companies are required to sell insurance to everyone, regardless of the hazard he represents.

The proposed Required Responsibility Law, he said, would obligate the driver to demonstrate his financial ability to pay any damage he might cause, but would place no obligation on insurance companies to sell him coverage at fixed rates.

Wicker said that Required Rand therefore the most hazardous —drivers might have difficulty getting any insurance at all, and that would be kept off the highways altogether. By getting the utterly irresponsible motorist off Virginia's highways, everyone would benefit.
